Susan Kotowski, a Ph.D. student in the Occupational Safety and Ergonomics program within the division of Environmental and Occupational Hygiene, recently received a University of Cincinnati Teaching Fellowship. This new fellowship program is part of the Preparing Future Faculty Program at the university that attempts to provide resources, opportunities, and feedback to graduate students who are interested in a career in academia. Fellowship awardees are required to teach a class for one quarter under the direction of a faculty mentor where they receive hands-on experience of teaching in the classroom.
